And Now for Something Completely Different...

Starting this month, our creative staff will be contributing short, informative and hopefully interesting articles in our monthly newsletters. The articles may be about a hobby, current events, new library offerings or even something our readers request. Please reach out to us and let us know if there's a topic that is of interest to you and may be of interest to other readers. You can email Cher Collins at ccollins@agawamlibrary.org to submit your ideas. Our very first article will appeal to our gardeners! Enjoy!

Grow Your Own Garlic
by Laura Paul

This is the first in a series of posts about growing garlic. Garlic is planted in the fall and harvested the following summer depending on the weather. This first post will focus on getting prepared to plant. You will need an area that has good drainage and lot of organic material mixed into the soil. A sandy bed will not work well for growing garlic. You also don’t want to plant garlic in a bed that had onions or other alliums growing the previous year. A pH level between 6 and 7 is recommended.

Summer is the time to order garlic to plant. Don’t buy garlic heads from the grocery to plant as they are generally soft-necked varieties and sometimes treated to suppress growth. (In this area, hardnecked varieties are reported to do best, although I have tried some softnecked too. Softnecked varieties store slightly better but they usually have more cloves per head which means more peeling when cooking!) Check online for reputable sources and perhaps try more than one type. Farmers Markets may have garlic suitable for planting. Talk to the seller and tell them you want it for planting. If you buy one pound of hardnecked garlic you should have approximately 45 cloves to plant. Each clove will grow into a head.

The next update in this garlic series will be in Sept., which is before the actual planting time. In the meantime you can get garlic to plant and plan where you will grow your garlic.

Barn Quilts by Tara Lane

Tara Lane has began sewing at the age of 10, and self taught, began making clothes for other people by the age of 12. She graduated from the Pratt Institute with a BFA in Interior Design in 1973. She worked for other designers and eventually opened her own firm in New York City in 1980, designing corporate interiors.

Tara became interested in horses in the early nineties, and she had to close her firm due to the recession in New York, she moved to Pennsylvania and later Massachusetts where she worked with horses, both teaching riding, competing in lower level events, and treating sport horses with muscle therapy techniques. She went back to school to prepare for a career in veterinary science, moved to California to further her studies, and was sidetracked back into the world of fiber and fashion, studying for and MFA at the Academy of Art University in San Francisco. There she honed her sewing and designing skills and also did an independent study semester with the master dyer Ana Lisa Hedstrom. Later on Tara went back to school to study for her Veterinary Technician Certificate, and passed her boards to become an RVT. Last summer she moved back to the east coast and now works as a Veterinary Technician at Veterinary Emergency and Specialty Hospital in South Deerfield, MA. Tara has sewn clothing most of her life, and put her sewing skills to quilting about a year and a half ago. After moving east, she began drawing the barns in the area as a way to pass time during the isolation of the pandemic. Her work has translated her drawings into the quilts which are shown at the Agawam Public Library for the month of July.

Have a Happy and Safe Fourth of July!
